An abundant supply of money means to the individual of capacity a field for the use of their abilities in prosecuting their various callings of life, and will be particularly valuable to associations of individuals by affording them facilities for obtaining capital for the transaction of all kinds of business. An abundance of money means universal activity, bring ing in its train all the blessings that belong to a constantly employed, industrious, intelligent people.

It would be a good thing for hardpressed farmers if they could borrow money without interest. The government would do an inestimable service to thousands of farmers if it could lift five or six thousand farmers out of financial difficulties by putting in their hands a loan which would cost them nothing. To talk about it is interesting to farmers because it opens to the mind a plan of

But where is the government to get the five hundred million or the billion of dollars to loan? It is not in the treasury and never will be. There rever will a time come when this government will be able to save that much money or onetenth of it unless taxation is enormously increased. With the expanding of the government expenses increase. The income of the government cannot grow without higher import duties and more internal taxes. The politicians who control conventions are howling about exessive texation. The free traders do n ot want impost duties at all, and some of the tariff reformers who are wolves in disguise, want a tariff for revenue only. If the demands of these free traders and the tariff reformers are obeyed, the goyernment would have to go begging; for the receipts would not equal the necessary expenditures by many millions of

PRESIDENTS AND THEIR POL-10IES.

The New York Sun wants President Harrison to have some pronounced, individual, sensational policy. The Sun doesn't like en easy-going administration. It wants one which will knock things right and left and make a stir in politics. In a late issue the Sun said:

An1 what shall be said of Harrisch's administration further than that it was foredoomed to failure from the first day when the cabinet that was to carry on its business was announced? The country has waited patiently, but so far vainly, for an indiction of virility and statemanship, of which Americans without reference to party affiliations could be proud, to lift it above the dead level of commonplace.

OTTAWA, Ont., March 13.-A terrible accident occurred yesterday afternoon to a Canadian Pacific railway train near Pembroke. a few miles west of here. The train consisted of two first-class and ne second-class Pullman cars, a dining and a baggage car. The accident was caused by spreading of the rails. The engine and tender remained on the track, but the coaches went down an embankment over twenty-five feet, and were badly wrecked.

The overturned stoves set the cars on fire, but only the dining and Pullman cars were seriously burned. Thirty people were on the train, all of whom were shaken up terribly. Twenty-two were seriously injured. Among these

ARGUING ABOUT LARD.

Representatives Butterworth and Mason Give Their Views.

Washington, March 13.—The House committee on agriculture devoted a session to hearing Representatives Butterworth and Mason, who favored and opposed, respectively, the measures pending before the committee having for their purpose the regulation and taxation of the manufacture of lard compound. Mr. Butterworth was the first speaker. He said the objects of his bill were to raise revenue, to regulate a certain industry so that it should not be permitted to destroy an established industry, and so that it should be conducted upon the principles of common onesty; and to prevent the extinction of an established article of commerce produced by the farmer. The bill did not propose to prevent the manufac-turers of compound lard from prosecuting their business. "We only ask," he said, "that in taking its place this in-dustry shall not place its fingers upon the throat of another industry."

Mr. Butterworth discussed the condition of the farmers of the country, taking a gloomy view of it. He said they

Mr. Butterworth said that the proposed legislation is constitutional will not destroy or damagé any industry at the expense of another, but would compel the makers and dealers of lard compound to hoist the flag of honest dealing over their transactions.

Congressman Mason said he appeared in behalf of the workingmen of his district to oppose the legislation proposed in the bills before the committee. His Mutilated Body Found in the Chi cago River-Clues Which Led to Its Discovery-Criminal News

CHICAGO, March 13.—The mystery surrounding the disappearance of Rowland Leach, the New York traveling man who left the Palmer house a week ago last Sunday, has been cleared up by the discovery of his body in the Chicago river near the foot of Market street, where it had been undoubtedly thrown by a gang of toughs who murdered and robbed the well-dressed stranger. Detectives and friends had well nigh become discouraged in their attempt to fathom the mystery until a new clue was presented in the story of Patrick Casey which was followed to a successful

While in the saloon a well-dressed man entered, accompanied by four men who looked, acted, and talked like typical "toughs."
Gilbert knew the well-dressed man was in strange and dangerous company, and for fifteen minutes watched him attentively. He was satisfied he could identify the stranger, and went to Klaner's morgue last evening. He instantly identified the body of Leach as that of the man whom he saw Wednesday night.

An Inquest at Peoria Clearly Proves that

He Was Murdered. PEORIA, Ill., March 13 .- All doubt as to whether Bernhard Junghaus was murdered was set at rest by the postmortem examination held by Drs. Mc-Fadden and Powell, of this city. The heart, lungs, stomach and brains were examined. There was no water in the lungs, as would have been the case had the old gentleman been drowned. There was scarcely any water in the stomach. The brain was in a congested condition. The heart had been punctured in the embalming process, but showed none of the symptoms which would have been present had life existed when the body touched the water. The cut on the head, to which reference has been made, was found to be less serious than was supposed. This leads Dr. Powell to believe that Junghaus was either sandbagged or drugged stone from the spot where the murder was committed in the river. Arrest of a Young Coudterfelter. MFacts Worth Knowing. In all diseases of the nessi mucous membrane the remedy used must be non-irritating. The medical profession has been slow to learn this. Nothing satisfactory can be accomplished with douches, snuffs, powders or syringes because they are all irritating, do not thoroughly reach the affected surfaces and should be abandoned as worse than failares. A muititude of persons who had for years borne all the worry and pain that catarrh can inflict testify to radical cures wrought by Ely's Oream Balm.

We're sailing to dreamland—baby and I.
How white are the dreamland sheep;
How purple the hills, how blue are the rills!
O. hasten. my darling, to sleep.
The birds—how delightful!
O. sleep a whole nightful.
They want you—the birds and the flowers,
And the gay butterflies,
They will dazzle your eyes
When you enter the dreamland bowers. We're sailing to dreamland-baby and I.

O cool and calm is the night; His rosy lips coo, his breath, sweetest dew, Fills my heart with love and light. O soft is the pillow And playful the billow And playful the blilow
That rocks us to dreamland, my own.
Are little feet ready?
Then steady—there—steady.
Thy mother must still land alone.

Do not accept any old friend of mine, and as he knew at Mr. Abbott's invitation. He was an tence. nothing of that part of the country I went with him to show him the wayan easy task. The inspection was finished and we were standing on the deep water.

"I don't understand how a man cam choose drowning as a means of suicide," said Abbott. "When a man is ready to commit suicide," I rejoined, "he is not particular about the means, I guess." "But that green, dirty water woulan't tempt a man, would it?" continued Abbott; and with his cane he reached down and stirred the broken

"No. the most rigid prohibitionist on earth would shy at that water," said I, with a view to changing the drift of the conversation. It is not pleasant on a dismal day to stand on whistle reminded us that the train to convey us to town was approaching. We turned our backs on the river and were in the cars two minutes later.

we went to the theater. The piece was ew to both of us. A sensational melodrama with all the latest improvements, including real water, a real locomotive, and several other realities. Infortunately not a real actor trod the stage that night. All the same the climatic episode of the play was horrirat in a corner, blew his brains out to escape the death penalty which he would have had to pay. The suicide was very life-like in its rendering. By some sleight of hand the actor contrived to dash some red liquid against his forehead at the moment he fired. and one seemed to see the very breach through which the life-blood was flow-

This was not the end of the play, but we did not wait to see the crowning of virtue in the last act. We went home to my rooms. Abbott had consented to spend the night with me and leave for Washington on the early morning

"Does the blood gush out like that from a gunshot wound?" said Abbott as we gained the street. My remembrance of a tragedy to which I was a witness seven years ago prompted me to say yes. An unhappy governess chose the moment I was passing her on the platform of a station on the Third avenue elevated railway in New York to put a bullet through her shapely head. A drop or two of the poor girl's blood splashed on me. This I did not discover till I took my collar off at night. I remember I took great pains to destroy that collar.

All this and more I told my friend as we walked through the quiet streets. He eagerly questioned me about the tragedy, and I told him all I could remember of the girl's story—a common one all the world over-too much love, too much trust, and an awakening too

"Do you think her death was painul?" Abbott asked. "Who can tell?" said I. "When I room at the police station I was astonsaw her afterward in a gas-lit back ished to see how calm and peaceful the expression of the girl's face was. Some kind hand had wiped away the bloodstains, and the ugly hole in the white forehead was hidden by locks of wavy dark-brown hair. Death hardly seemed to be a visitor there."

It was not until we were within my own rooms that I noticed Abbott was strangely preoccupied. He had not been in good spirits all day, but neither had I. I attributed our distemper to the weather. Sky the color of blotting paper and a cold wet wind are not cheering, especially if encountered beside a swollen, muddy river. But Abbott was not interested in the drawing of corks as was his wont. The beer laughed in his glass, but found no reflection in his face. He smoked a very mild cigar—a small thing a boy might manage-as nervously as if it were as strong as my friend Belford's biggest Reginas. The topic we discussed I made it a point should not be gloomy. It was the marriage of a mutual friend a few days before. But before we had speculated two minutes concerning the bridegroom's prospects Abbott had given the conversation a funereal turn by dilating upon the advantage of insurance, especially to a married man. "Most of the insurance companies, I notice," said he, "no longer regard suicide as nullifying their contracts. In several cases lately the full insurance has been paid over to the suicide's heirs."

But I did not really notice this recurrence to the theme of self-destruction at the time. When two cigars had disappeared in fragrant smoke and ashes we were ready for bed.

As Abbott threw his trousers over a chair something gave out a harsh clink. "You are prepared for prohibition districts," said I.

"No," Abbott replied, and he took out from his hip-pocket of his nether garments a plain, serviceable sixshooter. "That's a pretty weapon, isn't it?" he added. I am not fond of loaded revolvers, and my examination

For weeks Abbott and I were to gether. Then he was ordered to take a sea voyage for his health. He sailed away two years ago. The ship was bound for an Australian port. He died at Sydney-not of brain disease, but plain, every-day typhoid fever. That was two years after I prevented him from ending his lease of life by his own act.

It fits in a socket attached to an endless wire running in gutters below ground, only a narrow slot showing on the surface. The contrivance is worked by machinery erected in a small tower. The motive power is a heavy stone weighing about half a ton, working like a clock-weight, the speed at which the "rabbit" travels being controlled by a man at a crank-handle. The gutters are laid diamond-shape, and the length of the course is about 200 yards, the

TOBACCO MARKET.

Decline in Prices in Connecticut as well as

There is a general complaint throughont the tobacco growing region of this state on account of the low price of to bacco, growers not appearing to undervail. The Gazette is permitted to print the following letter, written to a prominent tobacco grower and dealer of this county, which may possibly throw some light on the question: -

"SUFFIELD, Conn:, Feb. 25th, 1890. DEAR SIR: -In reply to yours of the 22d I would say, that our Connecticut tobacco has also very much declined in price since last fall or early in the winter. We are buying now at from 7 to 10 cent crops that 15 and 18 cents were offered for and refused early in the season, and are buying slow even at these prices. I am inclined to thick that the same goods can be bought later all packed for the same money. The tobacco market is overloaded with medium and poor tobacso, and I look upon it as poor property at any price. The Pennsylvania crop is nearly all in the farmer's hands end of which is slit with rows of little yet and likely to be unless it can be bought for even less price than Wisconsin or Connecticut is selling for, and you know at out-selle us for fillers and the trade now demands fine tobacco for and the deep pilgrim or wing-like sleeves binders.
